Message from the Guest Editors

The design, development, and processing of aluminium alloys and their composites occupy a pivotal position in modern industry. In the case of aluminium alloy composites, researchers have effectively improved the materials' toughness and wear resistance by introducing various reinforcing phases, such as ceramic particles, carbon nanotubes, and graphene. In addition to material design and development, the processing technology of aluminium alloys and their composites is also key to enhancing their material performance and application scope.

This Special Issue will focus on the design, development, and processing technologies of aluminium alloys and their composite materials. We warmly invite you to contribute full papers, newsletters, and reviews on the latest developments and research results on this topic.
